Deep in the heart of Tangleland, Grand Duchess RavenHair was furious.

RavenHair told HairBall her plans to drive the royal family out of LovelyLocks.

RavenHair decided to visit the party.

Lady LovelyLocks took a nap in the safety of her royal nursery.

A silence fell across the room when the Duchess made her entrance.

In false friendship, RavenHair offered a gift for Lady LovelyLocks.

The wind blew and blew . . .

... everything and everyone far away, never to be seen again.

An old wizard instructed Silkymane to take the Princess, Lady LovelyLocks, to a farm near the edge of the kingdom.

The farmer and his wife raised and loved Lady LovelyLocks, though they had no idea who she was.

Lady LovelyLocks grew up to be good, kind and beautiful.

All of the farm animals loved her because she was so gentle.

Lady LovelyLocks had a talent for gardening.
The flowers seemed to bloom at her touch.

The farmer's wife told Lady LovelyLocks that the rainbow streaks in her hair were the mark of royalty . . .

... and that she must be the Princess of the lovely land.

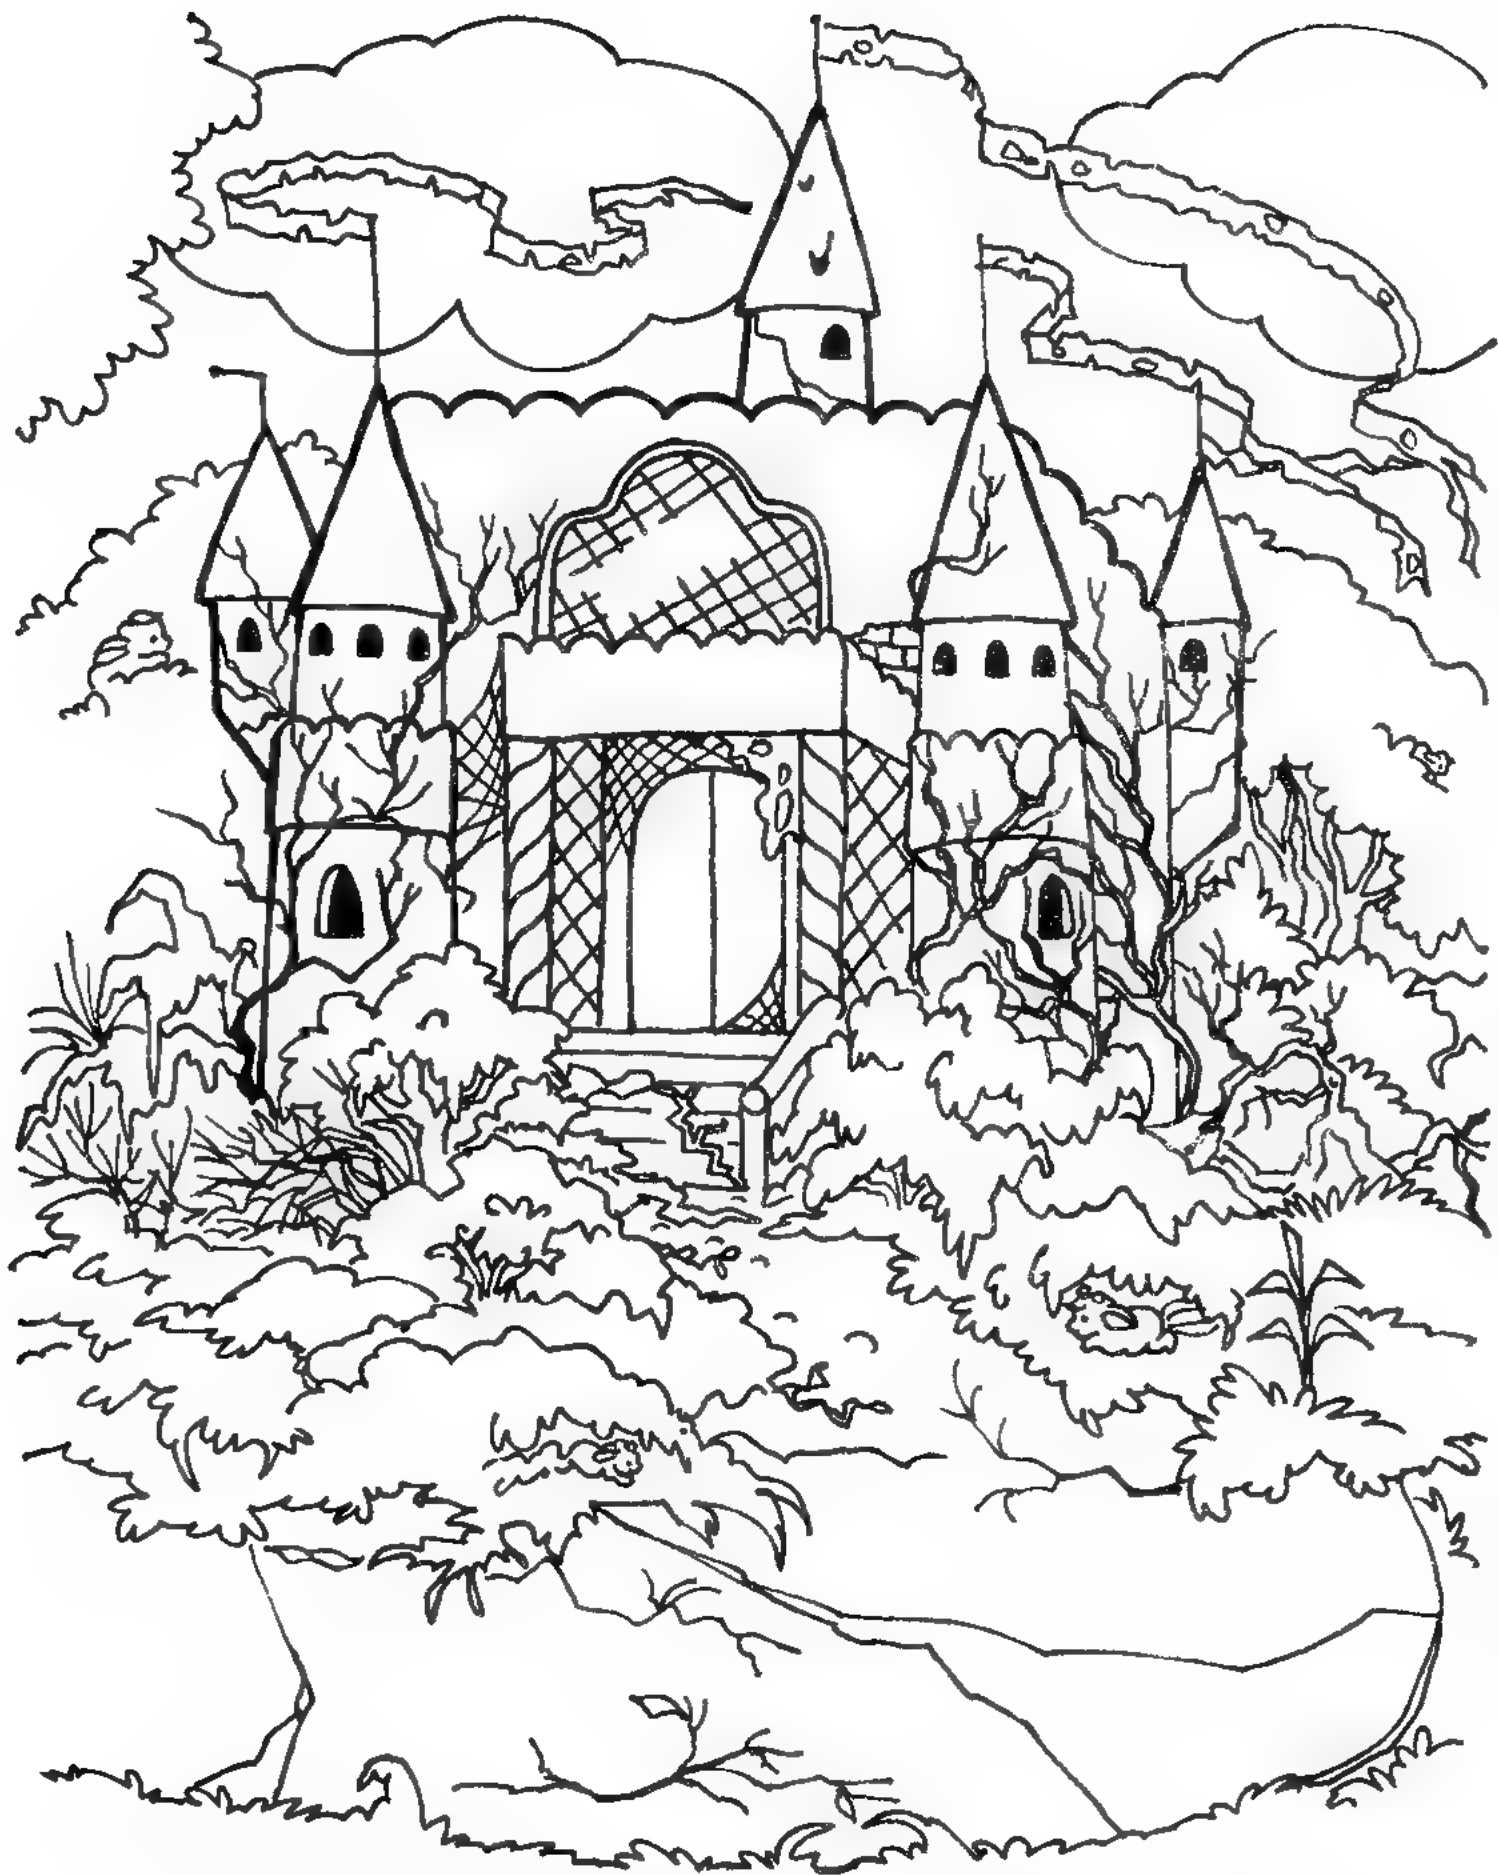

Lady LovelyLocks bade a sad farewell to her adoptive family.

She set out for the royal castle with Silkymane, Silkypup, and her devoted friends, Maiden FairHair and Maiden CurlyCrown.

When they arrived at the castle, they were all shocked.

Lady LovelyLocks and her friends had to restore the castle's former beauty.

Lady LovelyLocks discovered that by shaking her hair she could summon cuddly little creatures, called Pixietails.

With a twix of their magical tails, they were able to make anything beautiful.

Soon the work at the castle was finished.

Word went out across the land that the people had a ruler again.

News of the return of Lady LovelyLocks reached the ears of RavenWaves, the daughter of the spiteful
Grand Duchess RavenHair.

RavenWaves told HairBall that she was more beautiful than the Lady and would rule the kingdom herself.

Lady LovelyLocks and her maidens made daisy chains in the garden.

A strange-looking creature brought an invitation for tea from Countess ComelyTresses.

Lady LovelyLocks had a hard time seeing the creature's inner beauty as she and the maidens followed him.

They soon realized they were entering the Forest of Never Known, where paths constantly change. If they went in too far, they might never come out!

Lady LovelyLocks told the maidens that it would be rude to turn back.

Suddenly, the path behind them disappeared; and they were surrounded by creatures like the one they had been following.

Lady LovelyLocks and her maidens planned to run as fast as they could . . .

... when a path opened, revealing a castle.

Inside the castle, the girls were led to a table filled with food.

At the other end of the room, Countess ComelyTresses made her entrance.

The Countess urged her guests to enjoy their refreshments.

Lady LovelyLocks could see no beauty in the heart of her hostess and only pretended to sip her tea.

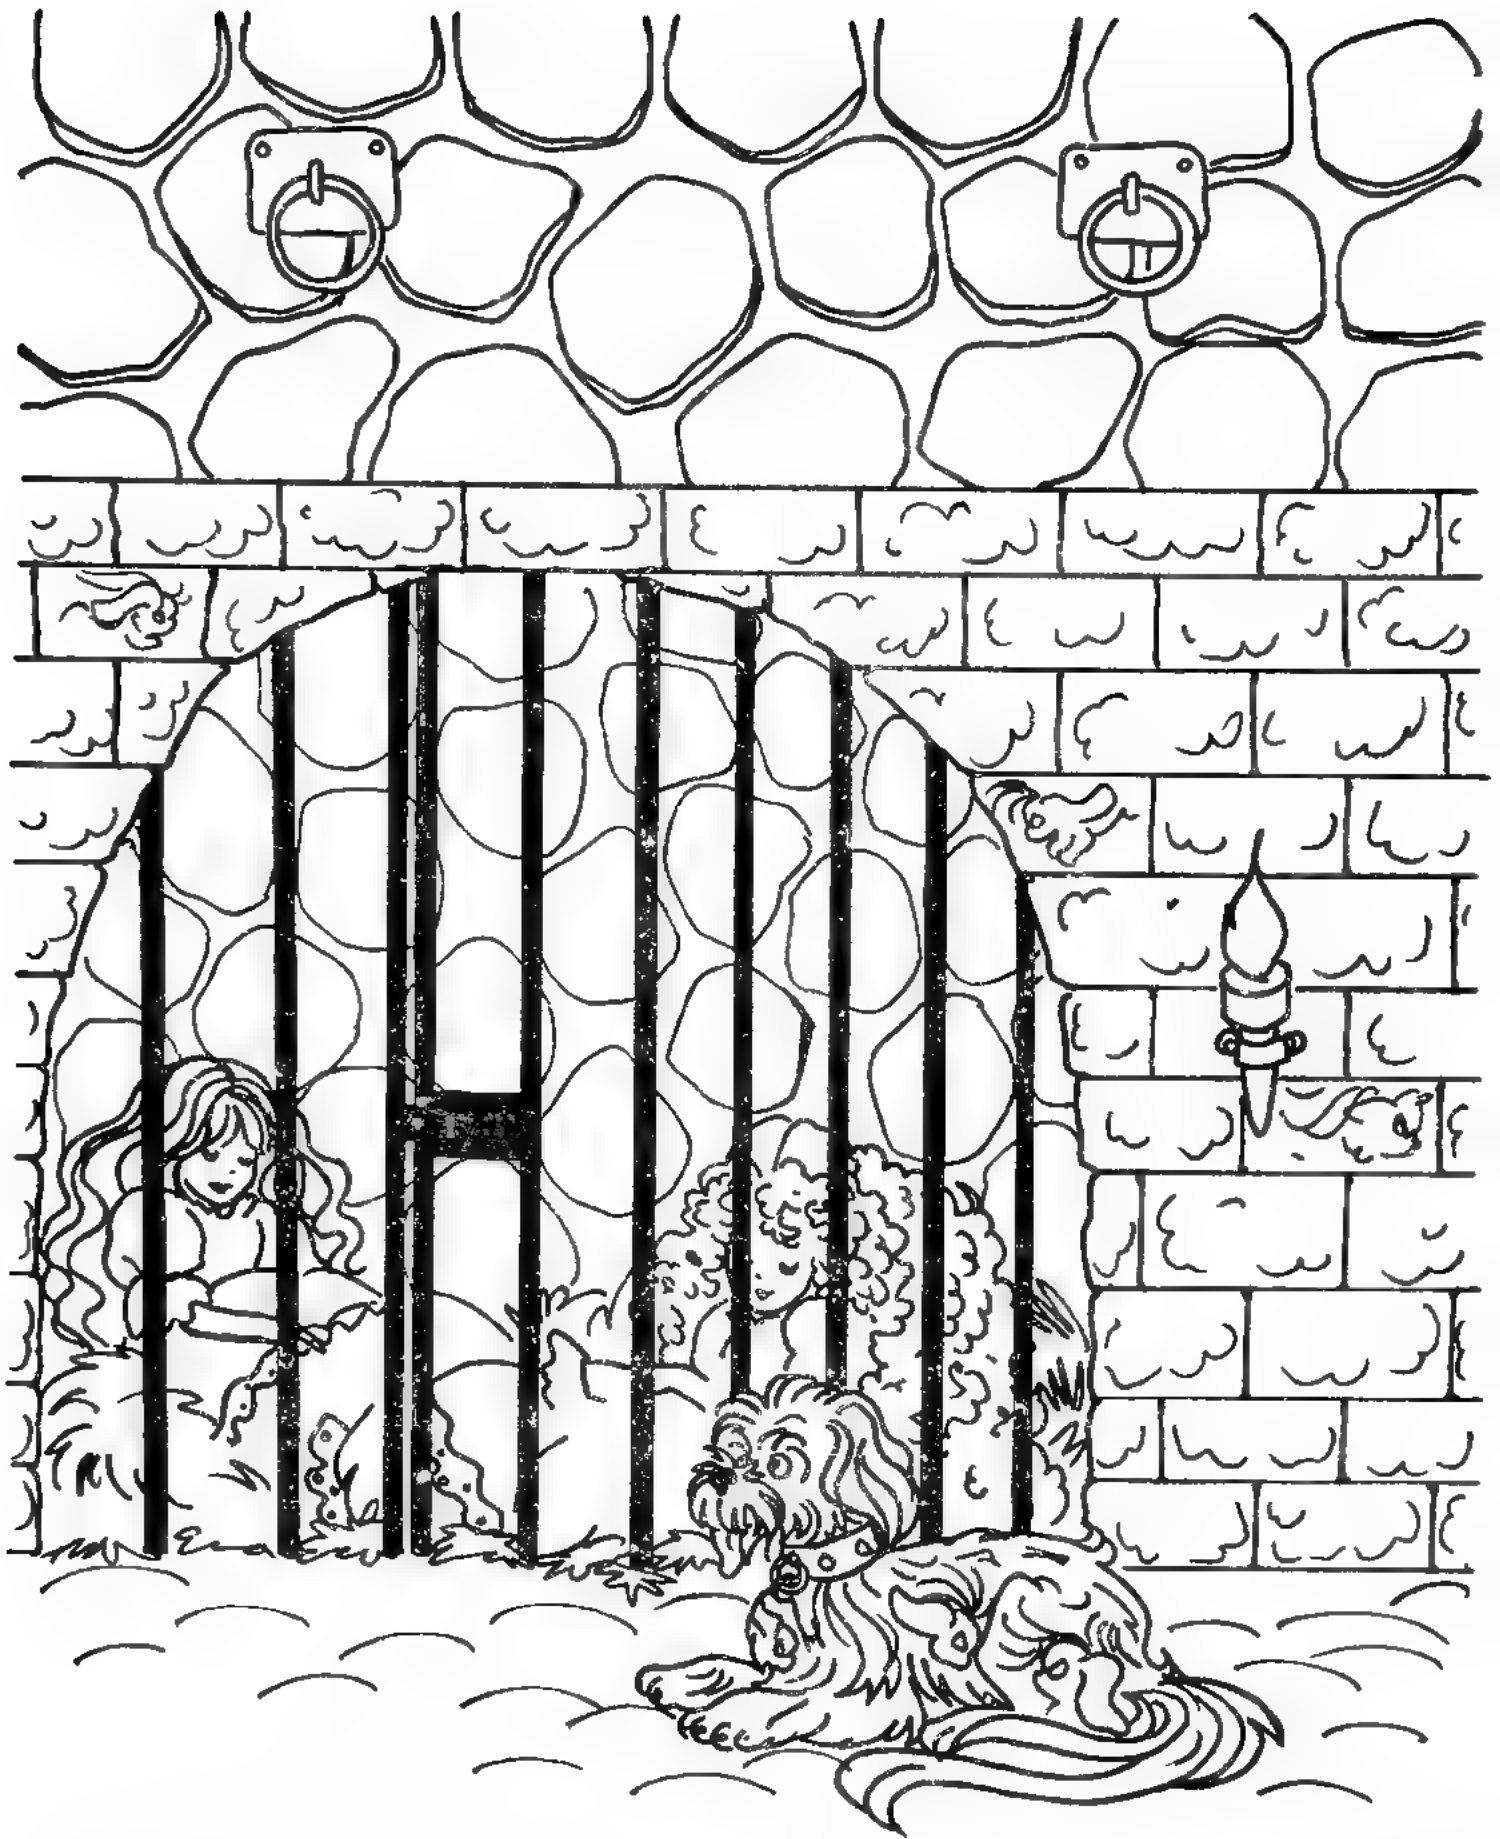

The Countess had put a potion in the refreshments to make her guests fall asleep.

But the wise Lady LovelyLocks only pretended to be sleeping. She realized that the Countess was really Duchess RavenWaves.

The strange-looking creatures were Comb Gnomes, who did whatever Duchess RavenWaves told them to do.

As HairBall and the Comb Gnomes took Lady LovelyLocks and her maidens to the dungeon, Lady LovelyLocks tried to see as much as she could.

Lady LovelyLocks used her ability to tame animals and fed the guard dog a cookie that would put him to sleep.

Lady LovelyLocks woke the maidens and unlocked the cell, so they could make their escape.

Finally outside, Lady LovelyLocks shook her hair to summon the Pixietails for help.

The castle alarm sounded, and the Comb Gnomes chased the escaped prisoners.

As the girls tried to escape, they fell into a Tangletrap.

Silkymane, Silkypup and the Pixietails arrived to free Lady LovelyLocks and the maidens.

Pixiepoo, known for her magic potions, poured a special untangling mixture over the trap to free the girls.

The Pixietails' magic was strong, and they smoothed a path out of the woods.

As Lady LovelyLocks and her friends were about to return home, RavenWaves and HairBall came upon them.

RavenWaves was angry and threatened that someone would pay!

As Pixieshine dazzled RavenWaves with a burst of light, CurlyCrown pushed her into her own Tangletrap.

Once again, the Pixietails undid the damage RavenWaves and HairBall had caused.

That night after supper, the girls discussed their adventure.

They decided that whenever good faces evil,
good is stronger and will conquer . . .

... and it helps to have good friends.
